| What has been worked on in the past month? | Throughout the last month there's been a huge emphasis on getting the school representatives trained and prepared for what to expect with undergoing the role. I've had a meeting with them on Microsoft Teams where we all discussed what we wanted to work on throughout our time in the roles, and gave our advice, thoughts, and opinions on how each can be successfully achieved. We've all agreed on some main topics that we want to work on as a college, and therefore integrate into every school. It's all been very encouraging so far, and I think we're all going to make a good team with working together to voice the opinions of students. |
| Successes from the past month and any Reps Wins | All the school representatives and I have introduced ourselves to relevant staff members as we take-over the roles from the previous team, and have begun discussing our ideas with them so they're aware. All the reps have also spoken to their predecessors on what to expect in the role, what they were previously working on, and how they can carry that forth. It's been a full month on learning, but I feel that college of science reps and myself are strongly prepared now to take on the role. Earlier this month I also sat on a new panel called the "teaching and learning student experience panel" which was exciting and is a new way for students to express their opinions on the way they're being taught - this will be a very crucial panel moving forward with the new 'blended learning' approach and will hopefully allow the teaching team at the university to strengthen the way they now teach. |
| Plans for next month | Moving forward, we're going to be spending the next month working on our 'Women In Science' campaign, which the entire CoS rep team is excited about, and this will be an ongoing campaign throughout the year. We're hoping to have plans drawn up on how we're going to utilise the campaign and make it as powerful as possible. I'm also going to be talking to the school of pharmacy on this new role they've introduced within their school called a 'diversity lead', and how it could be implemented within all schools within CoS. |
