

Volunteer Officer Report February 2019

Taylor Stevens – School of English & Journalism Rep

What has been worked on in the past month?

This month the School of English and Journalism has had all three of their subject committees. Although I was unable to attend the PR and Journalism committee, course reps handled these committees incredibly and I want to give them a huge thanks for all their hard work. There were two pre-meets set up ahead of the English committee, both of which were really productive and these meetings helped us to relay feedback in a more effective way. I have been pushing the NSS along with my third year course reps and I am happy with amount of people I have heard and seen taking part in the survey. The committees and the NSS have been to the two biggest focuses this past month and so time has been spend on those issues most predominantly.

Successes from the past month and any Reps Wins

All three committees have been attended and I am happy with the action plans that followed these committees.

Plans for next month Next month

I have not got any specific plans for this month so I hope to spend the month getting as much student feedback as possible. There has been a decrease in communication that myself and the reps have had with the student body and so I want to review this and assess how feedback might be collected in a more effective way. I hope that in doing this, reps and I have more to work on and more ways in which we can help improve the student experience.
