I was planning on running a feedback focus group, as our students rate feedback as our worst area in the NSS each year. Unfortunately, I did not receive any student interest in this and have had to cancel the session. I will be making a questionnaire instead that will go out to all students in the school and hopefully we can get some good information from that in how to improve feedback. The goal from this is to hopefully make some sort of feedback sheet that students will attach to assignments for more feedback more tailored to what students want.

Before the end of the year I am hoping to run a CV and LinkedIn session with an alumni of ours who works for a major forensics provider. He helps to hire people for that company so he would be perfect to help us write good scientific CV's.

One of my reps had the idea to do a book sale at the end of the year, where third year students can try to sell their textbooks that they might not be using anymore, to current students. We are looking into running that with life sciences and pharmacy in JBL.
